INTEGRATED MARKETING

Reach community college leaders efficiently and effectively with an integrated marketing strategy.

AACC provides community college leaders with access to news and information that they want, when they want it and how they want it — 24/7/365. Each medium – print, online, events – plays a special role in delivering content and each offers marketers a unique way to engage, inform, and sell.

Reach the greatest number of buyers with an integrated marketing strategy.

Because buyers arrive with built-in media preferences — that is they each choose where they will go for information (print publications, online information, or in-person events) — effective marketing campaigns include all of these touch points to maximize reach and effectiveness.

Reach buyers no matter where they are on the purchasing path.

The decision to purchase a product typically does not happen the first moment buyers hear about it or see it. It is the result of awareness, understanding, and trust that builds over time. As you plan your marketing strategy, consider the way community college buyers move along the purchasing path from general interest to purchase. Reach these buyers wherever they are in their process with a fully integrated plan.

THE CASE for an Integrated Marketing STRATEGY

Integrated marketing plans lead to a significantly better return on investment (ROI). In fact, an integrated marketing solution will outperform a nonintegrated approach by as much as 800%.

Source: U.S. Forrester Research

91% of B2B decision makers agree: “It’s easy for me to recognize or remember a company’s brand or products when I see messages about it in multiple media such as magazines, online or at events.”

Source: U.S. Forrester Research

In a study of convention attendees with the authority to recommend and/or purchase products/services for their organizations, 82% said they are likely to buy if they have seen a company’s advertisement or website prior to an event.

There was a golden era, in the 1960s and 1970s, when beaming lawmakers smiled on community colleges. Public funds flowed like a river that nourished the nation’s two-year institutions. Enrollments grew and everyone was happy, naturally.

But that was then. Over the past few decades, public funds have dried up, and formerly munificent politicians are now beleaguered by hordes of constituents seeking financial support. Legislators charged with fiduciary oversight of municipal and state budgets increasingly demand that recipients of public money demonstrate return on investment.

Amid greater scarcity and scrutiny, community college leaders have had to piece a smaller slice of the pie. As resources dwindle, colleges compete with other worthy causes for state and federal support.
