Juggling jobs and school

Nearly three in five of all community college students work.

Most community college students are trying to balance school and employment. In 2012, about 62 percent of full-time community college students and 73 percent of part-time students worked while attending school. Nearly 41 percent of part-time students worked full time and another 32 percent of them were employed part time. Only a quarter of part-time students didn’t work at all, according to the National Center for Education Statistics.
