Balancing school and work

Nearly half of 2013 high school graduates attending community college are working.

Students in the workforce

45%  Two-year colleges

28%  Four-year colleges

Two out of three students (66 percent) who graduated from high school in 2013 were enrolled in colleges and universities later in the fall. Those who attended two-year colleges were much more likely to have a job (45 percent) than students attending a four-year college (28 percent), according to recently released data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics.
