

The information provided below is estimated and may change. These data represent an estimate of the funds public community colleges might expect to receive from the CARES Act. The data provided come from analysis conducted by the American Council on Education (ACE), using the most recently available IPEDS data to estimate the funds based on the language in the legislature. While several assumptions need to be made, AACC believes it is a reasonably good estimate of the allocation of funding. The Federal government will make the final determination of the exact calculations for the disbursement. The information is not official or final and should not be considered as such. The information provided below is estimated and may change. These data represent an estimate of the funds public community colleges might expect to receive from the CARES Act. The data provided come from analysis conducted by the American Council on Education (ACE), using the most recently available IPEDS data to estimate the funds based on the language in the legislature. While several assumptions need to be made, AACC believes it is a reasonably good estimate of the allocation of funding. The Federal government will make the final determination of the exact calculations for the disbursement. The information is not official or final and should not be considered as such. The information provided below is estimated and may change. These data represent an estimate of the funds public community colleges might expect to receive from the CARES Act. The data provided come from analysis conducted by the American Council on Education (ACE), using the most recently available IPEDS data to estimate the funds based on the language in the legislature. While several assumptions need to be made, AACC believes it is a reasonably good estimate of the allocation of funding. The Federal government will make the final determination of the exact calculations for the disbursement. The information is not official or final and should not be considered as such. The information provided below is estimated and may change. These data represent an estimate of the funds public community colleges might expect to receive from the CARES Act. The data provided come from analysis conducted by the American Council on Education (ACE), using the most recently available IPEDS data to estimate the funds based on the language in the legislature. While several assumptions need to be made, AACC believes it is a reasonably good estimate of the allocation of funding. The Federal government will make the final determination of the exact calculations for the disbursement. The information is not official or final and should not be considered as such. The information provided below is estimated and may change. These data represent an estimate of the funds public community colleges might expect to receive from the CARES Act. The data provided come from analysis conducted by the American Council on Education (ACE), using the most recently available IPEDS data to estimate the funds based on the language in the legislature. While several assumptions need to be made, AACC believes it is a reasonably good estimate of the allocation of funding. The Federal government will make the final determination of the exact calculations for the disbursement. The information is not official or final and should not be considered as such. The information provided below is estimated and may change. These data represent an estimate of the funds public community colleges might expect to receive from the CARES Act. The data provided come from analysis conducted by the American Council on Education (ACE), using the most recently available IPEDS data to estimate the funds based on the language in the legislature. While several assumptions need to be made, AACC believes it is a reasonably good estimate of the allocation of funding. The Federal government will make the final determination of the exact calculations for the disbursement. The information is not official or final and should not be considered as such.
